One of the difficulties in studying Chinese philosophy is that there are two ways that Chinese characters have been converted into the Roman alphabet. The older Wade-Giles Romanization of the Chinese is given in parentheses. The earlier editions of Koller's text used this older method but the current edition we are using employs the Pinyin method which is now the standard. Thus, to be clear, the older Wade-Giles romanization of the Chinese character 道was Tao, but now the preferred Pinyin is Dao.
